

Freedom to Believe

Upholding the Standard of the Universal Declaration
of Human Rights

Bahá'í International Community's Statement on the Freedom of Religion or Belief

Freedom to Believe

Upholding the Standard of the Universal Declaration
of Human Rights

Copyright 2005 Bahá'í International Community

Bahá'í International Community
866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 120
New York, NY 10017, USA

INTRODUCTION

- 1 Over fifty years ago, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights boldly proclaimed the inherent dignity and the equal rights of all members of the human family. Guided by the vision of equality for all, the Declaration enshrined the fundamental right of every human being to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. Despite the international community's unanimous¹ adoption of this Declaration and its codification in subsequent instruments of international law,² the world bears witness to persistent intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, the proliferation of violence in the name of religion, the manipulation of religion in the interest of political ideology, and increasing tensions between religion and State policies.³ The rising tide of religious extremism has fuelled these developments, threatening security, human development, and efforts towards peace. Widespread violations of this right — most often targeting women and minorities — have continued. Given the interdependence of human rights, such violations have compromised, among others, the right to education, employment, peaceful assembly, citizenship, political participation, health, and at times, life itself. Indeed, the promise of freedom of religion or belief for all remains one of the most contested and pressing human rights of our time.

¹ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, U.N. Doc A/810 at 71 (1948). New York: United Nations. The Declaration was adopted with no dissenting votes, with eight countries abstaining from approval: Poland, Byelorussia, Czechoslovakia, Ukraine, Yugoslavia, South Africa, Saudi Arabia, and the Soviet Union.

² No fewer than 28 international human rights instruments contain provisions specifically pertaining to freedom of religion or belief.

³ Civil and Political Rights, Including Religious Intolerance: Report submitted by Mr. Abdelfattah Amor, Special Rapporteur, in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/18. U.N. Doc. E/CN.4/1999/58 (1999).

- 2 The freedom to hold beliefs of one's choosing and to change them is central to human development as it makes possible the individual's search for meaning — a distinguishing impulse of the human conscience. As such, the Bahá'í International Community applauds recent efforts by the United Nations to include cultural and religious freedom in its conceptual framework and evaluation of human development.⁴ Equally significant has been the United Nations' affirmation of the interrelatedness of development, security and human rights and
- ...the promise of freedom of religion or belief for all remains one of the most contested and pressing human rights of our time....*

⁴ The United Nations Development Programme 2004 Human Development Report titled, Cultural Liberty in Today's Diverse World, for the first time in the Report's fifteen year history, acknowledged cultural liberty as a "vital part of human development" and affirmed the "profound importance of religion to people's identities." It is significant that the analysis of human development throughout the Human Development Reports has evolved from a predominantly materialist approach centered on wealth and income to embrace the concept of development as the expansion of human freedoms. Equally important has been the release of the United fundamental freedoms,⁵ setting the stage for an earnest re-examination of the role of freedom of thought, conscience, and religion in the pursuit of a peaceful, prosperous, and just society.

- 3 As a worldwide religious community, which regards the human conscience as sacred and upholds the individual's independent search for truth, we urge the United Nations to give serious consideration to four critical yet neglected issues related to the right to freedom of religion or belief: (1) the right to change one's religion or beliefs; (2) the right to share one's beliefs with others; (3) the responsibilities of the international community and national governments vis à vis marginalized and peacefully organized religious communities; and (4) the responsibilities of religious leaders vis à vis the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of religion or belief. We will address each issue in turn and conclude with recommendations for United Nations' work in this area.

*The
freedom to hold beliefs of one's choosing...is central to human development...*

Nations Development Programme's annual Arab Human Development Reports, marking a pioneer effort by Arab scholars in this area. The widely noted 2002 Report identifies freedom as both the "guarantor and the goal" of human development and human rights, singling out freedom as a primary requisite for development in the Arab region. The 2004 Report, which discusses the deficits of freedom and good governance in the region, examines the religious, legal, and political structures impeding human freedoms and calls for immediate action to address the priority of 'ending all forms of discrimination against any minority group.'

⁵ 2005 World Summit Outcome, U.N. Doc. A/60/L.1

THE RIGHT TO CHANGE ONE'S RELIGION OR BELIEFS

- 4 The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in Article 18, explicitly affirms that,

“Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.”⁶

The right to change one's religion or belief is accorded the status of a non-derogable right — a right that is protected unconditionally and is, at no time, subject to government regulation.⁷

The special measure of protection accorded to this right reflects its place in safeguarding the dignity of the human being. Indeed, the individual's search for

The right to change one's religion or belief is ...protected unconditionally and is, at no time, subject to government regulation.

⁶ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 18, supra note 1.

⁷ A non-derogable right is not subject to governmental regulation, even in times of a national emergency.

truth and meaning is an activity most intimately linked with the human conscience and with the desire to see the world through one's own eyes and to understand it through one's own faculties of perception and intelligence. As such, it is inextricably linked with all facets of human development.

- 5 Due to pressure from dissenting States, however, subsequent United Nations treaties have used weaker language to define this right, failing to uphold the unambiguous standard set by the Declaration.⁸ Even the General Assembly's 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination based on Religion and Belief issued by the General Assembly does not explicitly affirm the right to change one's religion or belief.⁹ In what is perhaps the most comprehensive articulation of the right to date, the Human Rights Committee has identified the freedom to ⁸ The freedom to change one's religion or belief has not been expressed with such clarity in any international instrument since the Declaration. For example: the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1966) provides for the individual's freedom "to have or to adopt a religion or belief of his choice"; the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights (1966) guarantees that the rights in the Covenant "will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to...religion..."; the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (1979) calls on States Parties to take all appropriate measures to guarantee women "the exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms on a basis of equality with men"; the Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) affirms the "right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion"; the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948) includes in its definition of genocide, "acts committed with intent to destroy...a national, ethnical, racial or religious group." Notably, regional treaties such as the American Convention on Human Rights (1969) and the European Convention on Human Rights (1950) explicitly provide for the freedom to change one's religion or belief.

change religion or belief, freedom to manifest beliefs, non-coercion in matters of religion, and non-discrimination on the basis of religion as core components of this right as provided for in the Declaration.¹⁰ Alongside United Nations jurisprudence, global conferences and gatherings over the last 15 years have generated near universal commitments to promote and respect freedom of religion or belief.¹¹ As signatories to the Universal Declaration and subsequent treaties and global commitments, governments bear the primary responsibility to create, safeguard, and promote the necessary conditions for the enjoyment of the freedom of conscience, religion or belief for all of their citizens.

...the individual's search for truth and meaning is an activity most intimately linked with the human conscience...

⁹ Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, U.N. Doc. A/36/684 (1981). The Declaration affirms the “freedom to have a religion or whatever belief of his choice, and freedom, either individually or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching.” It is unfortunate that this Declaration has not yet attained the status of a legally binding Covenant.

¹⁰ Human Rights Committee, General Comment 22, Article 18, U.N. Doc. HRI\GEN\1\Rev.1 at 35 (1994). The remaining core components of this right include: the rights of parents, legal status, limits on government’s permissible restrictions, and non-derogability.

¹¹ Global conferences, Declarations and Programmes of Action that have affirmed the right to freedom of religion or belief include the following: Declaration on the Elimination of all Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief (1981), Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (1993), Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action (1995); the United Nations Millennium Declaration (2000); Millennium World Peace Summit — Commitment to Global Peace (2000); Durban Declaration and Programme of Action (2001).

THE RIGHT TO TEACH ONE'S RELIGION OR BELIEFS

- 6 Intimately connected with the freedom to hold and to change one's religion or belief is the freedom to share those beliefs with others. Within the broad range of activities potentially encompassed by the freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs — the right to teach one's religion or beliefs has been particularly contentious.¹² While the Declaration calls for the unconditional protection of the 'internal' right to freedom of religion, the 'external' right to manifest one's beliefs is subject to limitations: Governments are permitted to place restrictions on this right for purposes of "meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society."¹³ This latitude extended to States, however, has too often been abused in efforts to quell minority populations and has raised questions about what constitutes legitimate governmental interference in manifestations of religion or belief.

¹² General Comment 22 (supra note 10) states that, "the practice and teaching of religion or belief includes acts integral to the conduct by religious groups of their basic affairs, such as the freedom to choose their religious leaders, priests and teachers, the freedom to establish seminaries or religious schools and the freedom to prepare and distribute religious texts or publications." The 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief explicitly provides for the right to teach one's religion.

¹³ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 29, supra note 1. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights similarly provides for limitations "as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others" (Article 18).

- 7 States argue that limiting the teaching of religions and the sharing of beliefs is necessary to preserve particular traditions and to protect the rights of the targeted populations, yet the right to freedom of religion or belief is necessarily contingent on the exposure to new ideas and the ability to share and receive information.¹⁴ Limitations on the basis of ‘maintaining public order’ and ‘morality’ have also been applied with considerable latitude and in a matter inconsistent with the principle of non-discrimination.¹⁵ Non-democratic and theocratic States in particular have repeatedly issued such reservations without the burden of proof, calling into question not only their interpretation of this right but also their protection of related rights and freedoms such as the right to employment and education, and the freedom of speech and peaceful assembly, to name but a few.¹⁶ While the ability to place restrictions on the freedom of religion

¹⁴ A change of identity resulting from conversion does not constitute a violation of the individual’s human rights. Rather it is one’s desire to maintain an identity that requires legal protection. Similarly, States cannot use the rationale of preserving particular traditions, religions, or ideologies to support limitations on freedom of religion or belief.

¹⁵ Limitations on the basis of preserving ‘morality’ are the most controversial and lend themselves to abuse as one religiously based moral principle can be used to override another’s religious belief. The Human Rights Committee’s General Comment 22 asserts that, “limitations on the protection of freedom of religion or belief must not be based on principles deriving from one single tradition,” supra note 10.

¹⁶ States have also issued blanket reservations on entire Conventions based on the State’s application of religious law. This is incompatible with Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), or belief can be meaningfully applied, States' abuse of these restrictions only exacerbates the marginalization of oppressed minorities.

- 8 The protection of the freedom of religion or belief must also entail vigilance in safeguarding citizens from the forces of extreme orthodoxy. Incitement to violence, extremism, or hostility in the name of religion must be forcefully sanctioned and unreservedly condemned.¹⁷ Similarly, States must consistently uphold the equality of women and men as a moral principle and article of international law, condemning actions in the name of religion, which deny human dignity and freedom of conscience to women. Ultimately, a long-term preventive strategy must be rooted in efforts to educate children and adults alike, equipping them with literacy skills and opportunities to learn about other systems of belief.

Incitement to violence, extremism, or hostility in the name of religion must be forcefully sanctioned and unreservedly condemned.

which provides for limitations that are proscribed by law and are “necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.” Furthermore, in its General Comment on Article 18 of the ICCPR, the Committee on Human Rights notes that any limitations on the freedom to manifest a religion or belief for the purpose of protecting morals “must be based on principles not deriving exclusively from a single tradition.”

¹⁷ The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights prohibits “any advocacy or national, racial, or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence.” Similarly, as called for in the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) Convention Against Discrimination in Education (1960), States should condemn and forcefully sanction those who, in the name of religion, use education and the media to oppress freedom of conscience and to promote division, hatred, terrorism, violence and bloodshed.

Within a culture of education, people who can read the writings of their own religion as well as those of others, who are free to question and discuss, and who are able to participate in the generation and application of knowledge will be better prepared to counter the forces of ignorance and fanaticism.¹⁸

¹⁸The former Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion or Belief, Abdelfattah Amor, emphasized education — particularly concerning human rights — as a key component of establishing a culture of tolerance and nondiscrimination. Mr. Amor convened the 2001 International Consultative Conference on School Education in relation with Freedom of Religion and Belief, Tolerance and Non-discrimination and called on participants to design a worldwide education strategy for combating intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief. (U.N. Doc. E/CN.4/1999/58)

MARGINALIZED RELIGIOUS MINORITIES

- 9 A further challenge before States today is the maintenance of social cohesion and national unity in the face of increasing cultural and religious pluralism. Often, the threat of social instability and violent protest becomes the primary motive for a State's decision to accommodate minority claims. Indeed, marginalized groups seeking redress can become violent, forcing States to address their claims in order to prevent social unrest and potential threats to national security. Yet this reactive mode breeds a dangerous pattern and itself gives a preference to violence, particularly where peacefully organized groups find their pleas repeatedly ignored. It increases the level of discrimination as groups find themselves excluded on the basis of religion and ignored as a result of non-violent modes of seeking redress.

States must discard outmoded notions of cultural homogeneity and ideological uniformity as a guarantor of peace and security...

- 10 The actions of States therefore must go beyond purely material and practical considerations and be guided by the force of moral principles and the rule of law. Foremost among these principles is that of unity — at the local, national, and global level — grounded in the peaceful accommodation of cultural diversity. States must discard outmoded notions of cultural homogeneity and ideological uniformity as a guarantor of peace and security and come to embrace a plurality of identities and beliefs, gathered together under the canopy of just laws and universal human rights, as the foundation for a cohesive and prosperous society.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS

- 11 The responsibility to uphold universal principles of freedom of religion or belief rests not only with States but with religious leaders as well. In a world harassed by violence and conflict in the name of religion, leaders of religious communities bear tremendous responsibility for guiding their followers towards a peaceful coexistence and mutual understanding with those who think and believe differently. Too often, those acting in the name of religion have fanned the flames of hatred and fanaticism, themselves serving as the greatest obstacles in the path of peace. Despite these painful truths, we bear witness to the fact that the religions and faiths of the world with which the majority of the earth's inhabitants stand identified, have imparted a vast spiritual, moral, and civilizational legacy, which continues to succor and guide in these troubled times. Indeed, religions have reached to the roots of human motivation to lift our vision beyond purely material conceptions of reality to embrace higher notions of justice, reconciliation, love, and selflessness in service of the common good.
- 12 Given the weight of culture and religion in shaping motivation and behavior, it is clear that legal mechanisms alone will not engender the commitment and mutual understanding required to sustain a culture of peaceful co-existence. The role of religious leaders as partners — in word and deed — in the creation of a culture of respect for human dignity and freedom of conscience, religion, or belief cannot be overstated. The forces of history now challenge every person of faith to identify spiritual principles within his or her own scriptures and traditions that answer the difficult questions posed by an age hungry for unity and justice in human affairs. In this common undertaking, based on an understanding of the inherent dignity, reason and conscience of every human being, religious leaders must uphold the sacred nature of the human conscience and unreservedly accord each individual the freedom to search for truth.

The forces of history now challenge every person of faith to identify spiritual principles ... that answer the... questions posed by an age hungry for unity and justice in human affairs.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- 13 We call on the United Nations to affirm unequivocally an individual's right to change his or her religion under international law. The General Assembly may request the International Court of Justice, under Article 96 of the United Nations Charter, to issue an advisory opinion on the issue of freedom of religion or belief. Specifically, the Court could be asked whether the principle of freedom of religion or belief has attained the status of jus cogens, customary international law, or is merely left to the interpretation of each state. Such a clarification would help to remove fallacious interpretations of this right and lend moral force to the condemnation of policies and practices that violate the principle of non-discrimination in matters of religion or belief.
- We call on the United Nations to affirm unequivocally an individual's right to change his or her religion under international law.*
- 14 Following this clarification, concrete actions — investigative, legal, and operational — must follow. First, research and analysis are needed to clarify minimum standards for compliance with international law and to develop indicators, marking the presence or absence of freedom of religion or belief. An annual world report, prepared by the United Nations, assessing the state of this freedom throughout the world would provide further substance and facilitate comparisons over time and across geographic regions.¹⁹

- 15 The United Nations needs to comprehensively and definitively address religious extremism as a major obstacle in the processes of peace.²⁰ While the

...the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women should consider formulating a comment on ...women's freedom of religion or belief.

United Nations has denounced religious intolerance and persecution, it has been hesitant to acknowledge and forcefully condemn religious extremism motivating violent and terrorist acts.²¹ As women often bear the greatest burden of religious extremism and ensuing violations of human freedoms, the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women should consider formulating a comment on issues specific to women's freedom of religion or belief.²²

- 16 We support the creation of a Human Rights Council with a view to restoring the primacy of human rights as set

¹⁹ Civil and Political Rights, Including Religious Intolerance, supra note 3.

²⁰ Ibid., 125 (a).

²¹ The UN has been reticent to identify religious fanaticism as a source of terrorism, referring to it indirectly, as for example, "terrorism motivated by intolerance or extremism" (S/RES/1373 (2001)). Even the various resolutions issued by the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights in response to the terrorist acts of 11 September 2001, failed to identify religious fanaticism as the force fueling these acts.

²² Tahzib-Lie, Bahia G. (2004). "Dissenting Women, Religion or Belief, forth in the Charter for of the United Nations. In addition, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights should undertake steps to strengthen the role of the Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion, increasing funding for her mandate to allow for the closer monitoring of trends worldwide and at a country level.²³ Given that the mandate of the Special Rapporteur represents one of the principal means of bringing issues of religious freedom to the attention of the United Nations, we recommend that more attention be given to the implementation of recommendations put forth by the Special Rapporteur. The High Commissioner may consider expanding the mandate of the Special Rapporteur beyond reporting strictly on violations to include reports of States' efforts to implement her recommendations. In general, the Rapporteur's reports would significantly benefit from a more substantial and interactive debate between the Rapporteur and States in question. For their part, beyond cooperating with United Nations human rights mechanisms, States should allow any visits requested by the Special Rapporteur and endeavor to meet her full investigative needs.

- 17 By recognizing the interdependence of freedom, development and security in today's world, the United and the State: Contemporary Challenges that Require Attention." In Lindholm, T., Durham, W. Cole Jr., Tahzib-Lie, Bahia G. (Eds.) Facilitating Freedom of Religion or Belief: A Deskbook. Oslo, Norway: Martinus Nijhoff Publishers.

²³ Only a small fraction of Member States have ever been monitored for compliance with the articles of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief.

Nations has paved the way for a timely re-examination of the universal right to freedom of religion or belief, its role in human development and the means for its protection. In an effort to stimulate meaningful debate

The human mind, endowed with reason and conscience, must be free to search for truth and to believe.

and necessary action, we have brought to the fore the standard of equality articulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and its implications for the construction of a culture respectful of the dignity and conscience of every human being. We believe that the protection of the right to freedom of conscience, religion or belief is not merely a legal exercise or a pragmatic necessity; it is part of a much larger and essentially spiritual undertaking of shaping attitudes and practices that allow human potential to emerge and flourish. The human mind, endowed with reason and conscience, must be free to search for truth and to believe.